Given the fact that we usually get forgetful of other peoples names and faces whether it is your boss, your classmate, your neighbor, or even that person you sat right next to in the coffee shop it is necessary for you to learn some practical and common techniques that will help you easily remember them. Memorizing peoples names may seem to be an easy thing to do, but it is actually not. It takes a lot of time as well as effort to finally master their names, and also their faces. But remembering names accurately can be easy if you know how to properly do it. It is the most essential thing to do whenever you have to meet and interact with other people, whether it is your boss, your teacher, students, your classmates, or anybody else that you have to talk to and interact with. It is intimately tied to his or her identity as an individual, says Philip Guo, an assistant professor in the University of Rochester. You may forget anything else about a person, like where he or she lives, goes to work or school, or any other things, but it is important that you remember at least that persons name. How you deal with a persons name can greatly affect the way that person deal with you in return or what that persons impression on you will be. You know that feeling you get in class when your teacher calls you by your first name and not just by any other name like You, or without even looking at his or her list of students names? Or that feeling of being special when a person that you really admire a lot addressed you using your name because he or she knows it? How about that feeling you get when someone calls you by a wrong name, or simply
