It has been written as a general overview outlining the main things you need to know about this subject. Its a short read and a great start for people who know little about the subject. But why should learn about it? Because Body Language is a huge part of our everyday lives; we instinctively read others body language without even knowing it. Only 7% of the words we use are important in the way we communicate, 55% is the body language we use. So what exactly is it? It is a group of movements that our body uses to communicate with others. Body language comes from the unconscious part of us unless we are actually thinking about how we move our body, for most of us it does it all automatically. So therefore we sometimes give mixed messages where our words say one thing and our body says another. Because so much of a persons body language is reflexive and because non verbal cues can contradict what a person is actually saying, learning how to read such cues (and also how to control our own body language) gives a person a superior edge in:

- Portraying confidence and commanding respect
- Putting people at ease
- Creating a sense of trust
- Persuading, selling, and influencing other people
- And Detecting truth or lies
